Dear Miss Sarten,

It very unfortunate – both this Friday & next Friday I shall be away. Monday 21st is the only day, but I don't make a journey on purpose. Probably another Friday of that year day in London would be free. But if you're going back, then make it Monday 21st at 4.30.

But why should you have been frightened, considering that I am as tame & mild as a very old Giraffe? I admit that the Zoo looking onto the Lake dazzled me: but only as a Giraffe might be afraid of the light.

Please forgive this scrawl written hastily.

Yours sincerely
Virginia Woolf

Your letter was sent on - I'm so sorry, I shant be in London again till October, when I suppose you'll be gone - If you're with Elizabeth, will you tell her I'm sending her, at last, the book I promised.
Best wishes for the novel. Yours this scrawl - V

Dear Miss Sarton,

I must thank you for the flowers, & for the poems, which I have not yet had time to read.

It gives me great pleasure that you should like my books, & I am grateful to you for saying so.

Yours sincerely

Tuesday.

I was abroad, & came home to various disasters - my mother-in-law's death among them - hence the delay in answering:

Shall be in tomorrow, 5-30 if that suits you. V.W.

Dear May, Sarton,

This is only a scrawl to say, in answer to your letter, that though they sent me a bound copy of your book, I have still not had time to read it. Every sort of MS. and other demand has been made on me partly through Ottoline's death and Philips wish to discuss her diaries and so on: and ~~anyhow~~. Its no good sitting down to read a book seriously with a mind in a whirl.

And

Also, I have lost all belief in written criticism--anyhow my own. One screws out a few bald statements, is terrified of results and so I become more and more loath to write down what is only a shot in the dark. But if youre in London later and still want wild and random impressions verbally probably we could arrange it. And as for feeling suspense about my judgment--that seems to me if I may say so absurd in the extreme.

I'm packing to rush down to Sussex; and have to sort out Roger Frys papers to take, so forgive both the typing and the matter.

Yours

Virginia Woolf
